

„Sharing University Papers“ LIBERTAS offers online publication facility for students

LIBERTAS – European Institute GmbH, a German think-tank on European and international economy and politics (www.libertas-institut.eu) offers students and young university researchers an online platform for their works. If students or postgraduates write or wrote a paper on European, international or comparative law, international politics or policy or related disciplines (economy, history, ethnology, geography etc.), in particular on European – third country relations, or on regional integration, and they are involved in undergraduate, graduate or post-graduate university curricula (like Bachelor, Masters, Ph.D. etc.) or in those of likewise institutions, they can send these papers as Word database to papers@libertas-institut.eu, with a short covering letter and if possible a CV.

LIBERTAS can consider all languages, but must reserve the right for technical reasons to refuse some languages. Anyway, a short abstract (up to 2 pages) either in English, German or French should be submitted in addition. English is suggested. Students should not be afraid if the language they write is not their native language; all research results should be made open to anyone in the world. And as the papers are in the Internet always an improved edition can replace the first one.

The purpose of this LIBERTAS action in this field is to facilitate debate and knowledge exchange around the papers published in the Internet, but also to disseminate papers around the world. To learn from the authors' conclusions, but at the same time, to open sources for the scientific work of others – this is the purpose.

The formatting will be:

- Name, address, e-mail, and other indications which are in the discretion of the author
- University, faculty
- Kind of paper
- Abstract (in English, French or German)
- Text of the paper

LIBERTAS retains and reserves all rights to refuse or, after publication, remove all papers. It also points out that all contents are those of the submitting parties and that it has no responsibility for any of the works published. No side has any financial claim for the publication, which is put on the website without any costs for the authors. And if there are no other agreements, the authors stay owners of the copyright.
